interesting stories, but they require transcription and may often involve a separate interview with a specially trained voice clerk (for

From the entry stage, avoid enumerator reinterpreting any ambiguously detailed answers across interviews. It is a good practice to have a complete list of codes. If you don’t know which code to use, it is better to write down the answer and give the code later, than discuss it with you. In all circumstances, he should never skip questions Key: if he answered in a questionnaire, unless you state a separate code elsewhere, always have a separate code.